Although exploration of academic resilience is a task for psychologists, support of academic resilience is primarily a task for teachers. It should be based on the effort not only to teach students well at school but also to successfully educate and nurture them for their future life. Understanding what helps students to achieve their good outcomes is then one of the promising ways leading to this goal.

Bibliography

